Michael “The Naples Speedster” Cenzi heads to North Carolina to participate in the first RACE 101 scholarship weekend

DENVER, NORTH CAROLINA, February 25, 2010

Naples, Florida, racer Michael Cenzi will begin his year long journey with the Race 101 education program this weekend in Denver, North Carolina. Cenzi’s racing talent is just the stepping stone to him achieving a career in motorsports. Michael states, “I am very excited to be participating in the Race 101 program and to work with Tony Blanchard. I hope to learn how to be a more complete driver not only understanding how the car works but also the inner working of the racing industry that will enable me to advance my career to the highest level possible.”

Need for “motorsports” based education

RACE 101 was founded by acclaimed crew chief Tony Blanchard. Best known for his work with NASCAR Sprint Cup sensation Joey Logano during his formative stock car racing years Blanchard recognized a need in the racing industry. “Achieving a career in motorsports requires much more than racing talent,” says Blanchard. “Young racers need to understand the mechanical side of their cars, and they need a solid public relations foundation. “We’re able to provide an education in their area of need. I’m excited to work with these young racers, and we have some great instructors and mentors involved with the program.
